where to go and what to do

Yes, at the Hampton Inn® hotel in Corydon, we admit it. "Corydon" is a rather unusual name. We know. But was your hometown named by a United States president? We didn't think so. You see, William Henry Harrison once owned the land that was used to found Corydon. So when he founded the town (as governor), he named it after a character in his favorite poem, "The Pastoral Elegy." To this day, we're a preservationist-minded lot. The state's first capitol building still stands in town, along with its most famous tree: The Constitution Elm, which once shaded those who drafted our state constitution.
